Galileo and the Science Deniers, by Mario Livio. It took the Catholic Church 359 years (1633-1992) to officially admit that Galileo Galilei was right: The Earth does revolve around the sun. The science denialism the Italian astronomer faced isn't the only aspect of early 17th century life that might seem familiar to us in the present day.

Jackson isn't a scientist, but he is aware of the many places that folds appear in nature, from DNA and vital proteins, to geometric folding that changes the space we live in. Jackson is one of a handful of premier origami artists featured in a new documentary called Between the Folds, in which director Vanessa Gould examines the art of origami as well as its relationship to math and science.
